lect, very aggravating to your feelings, but my conduct was not so perfectly soul-harrowing to you as that of a member of the legislature who, upon personally attempted to bribe, and who, upon consultation with his friends, "dred up" $500 of your money, but did not give you his vote. I will recollect the letter you wrote that party, after the election was over, demanding the return of your money, and have often laughed at the ludicrous terms of the settlement finally made between you. I might, perhaps, stop right here, but let me say to the investigating committee might think the foregoing specimen of my handwriting was not sufficient for exhaustive comparison, and as you publicly declare yourself so strongly of opinion that I am the author of the letter sent (there it is again), of the letter sent to Mr. Springer, I will add to the specimens further by referring, in a pleasant and friendly way, to some of those other little trifles in your congressional experience, which will remind us both, in the most striking manner, of your great change of heart in the matter of "bribery and corruption," from which your virtuous and now shrink with such unaffected horror. For you will recollect, Donnelly, you did not always play on one side alone of this "bribery and corruption" business, to which I have referred, by no means, as too many could if they would only testify. When you was in Congress, Mr. Donnelly, and held a pretty strong hand on a certain committee, but which important interests had come for legislation, how you did make "the bloody" how you followed parties through the halls of the house into the "speaker's room," to their hotels, and even to neighboring cities, demanding money of them for the great services you claimed you were rendering. I recollect the time, as I am sure you will, also, when a party upon whom you had been making "a levy," not knowing that you and I "were out," but supposing you the representative of my district, and that we were personal and political friends, sent a draft or check of $2,500 to me with the request that I hand the same to you, which I did; and I also remember how, amid the tinkling blouses which colored to a deeper red, your rosy cheeks when I handed to you that tell-tale letter and inclosure, you generously offered—nay, more fairly besought me to accept. But, Lord bless us, Mr. Donnelly, what was $2,500 to you in those days? Why, I recollect being told by a party in interest of your own levying an assessment of $5,000 on the agent of a party desiring action on a bill which was in your hands. Acting under the demands of necessity, he paid you that amount, when you quietly jumped on the cars, and, running over to New York, took that agent's principal for $5,000 more. Not having been advised of the agent's action, this principal gave you a check for another $5,000 which he made payable to the order of his agent in Washington. When you went back to the agent to get his endorsement how he did swear! Called you a swindler, a double-barreled blackmailer, a pirate, and all such naughty names, and stubbornly refused to endorse the check, putting you to the trouble of another trip to New York, to make the best explanations you could. But then it came out all right, and you got your extra $5,000. There are many other instances, which might be recalled, of your sycophantic and virtuous vigilance in guarding the purity of legislation, and your peculiar methods of opposing bribery and corruption when a member of Congress, but I must forbear, as I am now acting only in obedience to courtesy and a friendly desire to aid you in detecting the infamous scamp who wrote your—of course I mean—the letter to Mr. Springer. Neither you nor the committee can reasonably ask for more copies or extended specimens of my handwriting to-day, but, in the meantime, Donnelly, you may assuredly rely upon my best efforts to aid you in this matter so long as you wish to continue the search for the author of your—the letter to Springer. You need not look in the treasury of Canada for me; I'll be at some point, to you and your investigating committee, until the authorship of your—that vile letter to Mr. Springer is satisfactorily settled. Don't doubt me, I assure you. I'll stand by you to the last, and if you wish any more specimens of my handwriting, draw on me at sight. Yours, for "reform," W. S. KING.

P. S.—I rely upon you, of course, to send this specimen of my handwriting to the committee of investigation, for whose use it is intended. I am sure you won't forget to do it. W. S. K.

THURSDAY, MAY 6, 1880.

Official Paper of the City and County.

BRIEFLETS.

—Ascension day.
—Regular night for the militia drills.
—The church folk meet for prayer to-night.
—Mrs. John T. McCullough, of Racine, is here visiting friends.
—Services were held at the Episcopal churches this morning.
—Marshall Russell is a little better today, though still confined to his bed.
—In the Circuit Court the Beloit case of Brittan vs. North is still on trial.
—Rev. Dr. Huntley is expected to occupy the Court Street Methodist pulpit on the last Sunday of this month.
—Miss Helen Porter's musicale will be given next Tuesday evening, at Lappin's Music hall, and will be an interesting occasion.

—The calico party given by Prof. Severance at Apollo hall last evening was well attended and proved a happy success in all respects.

—The funeral services of General Brewster Randall were held this afternoon at the family residence, Rev. A. L. Royce, of Christ Episcopal church, officiating.
—Dr. Henry Palmer and Dr. J. B. Whitling were in attendance at the State Medical Convention in Milwaukee yesterday. Dr. Whitling read a paper before that body.

—For several days a fellow has been travelling from saloon to saloon playing his bagpipes for the benefit of his own pocket and the filling up of his own stomach, regardless of the torture caused to the ears of others. Yesterday his strength was so nearly exhausted in liquidating his claims, that he was given a rest in jail, and this morning on appearing before Justice Nolan, was kindly given permission to leave the city within twenty-four hours.

—A boy who has been working for George J. Kellogg for a month or so, was arrested and brought before Justice Brooks this afternoon. It appears that he went to the depot after some trees for Mr. Kellogg, and after paying the freight charged the figures, so that he could keep back part of the change. Mr. Kellogg's house was also broken into Sunday last, and ransacked, but only twenty-five cents in money taken, and the same boy is suspected of having done that.

WORKING THE WIRES.

How the Telephonic Exchange is Doing Business Around the City.

Some of the Experiences of Those Who Use the Phones.

Business and Pleasure Combined.

Although the telephonic exchange has been in operation in this city only two months, it has already become such a fixed matter of fact that the public has lost to a great degree that amazement at its wonderful convenience and marvelous workings, which kept the tongues wagging so lively on its first introduction. Like all such improvements the chief wonder seems to be now how the city ever got along without it. It saves so much time and shoe leather, and its advantages are ever on the increase, for each additional telephone benefits all those already connected with the exchange, as it increases the territory which the wires cover.

The territory already covered is a large one, and the wires extend from the central office in all directions, like the spokes of a wheel. The extreme distance between any two points takes about three miles of wire, it being from the institution for the blind to Thor Judd's residence. There are now about thirteen miles of wire stretched in different directions, and with thirty-six telephones are connected, centering in the main office. When the exchange started two months ago there were only eighteen, and while the number has doubled since then, it would easily have tripled had it been possible to get the necessary material, but the factories have been behind, and have delayed the extension of the lines. As soon as the material can be had, a number of other telephones will be put in, but at present the list is as follows:

At the central office there is some one in attendance night and day to respond to every call. In the night time the call causes a bell to sound which awakens the sleeper, but in the day time a simple sounder, something like that in a telegraph office, calls attention, and in dropping indicates what line the call was made over. The boy in the central office on being told who the party calling wants to talk with, connects the two lines so that it is just the same as though a private line, independent of the central office, was established between the two points. About half of those having telephones have also put in transmitters, or what are commonly called microphones, so that by keeping the phone to the ear and talking through the microphone, the conversation can be kept up without any of the awkward delay necessitated by the use of the phone to speak into as well as to hear with.

As is quite natural with the introduction of such an invention there have been many comical misunderstandings as to the workings of the telephone, and some ludicrous happenings have attended its use thus far. The transmitter proves a good deal of a puzzle to some, because any sound in the room where it is placed is easily caught by the person listening at the other end of the wire in connection. The other evening when Pat Rooney's band was playing in front of the Opera house, the windows of the central office were open, and even at that distance the transmitter or microphone caught up the music, and by putting the wires in connection, those listening at the Institution for the Blind heard the band distinctly. Of course a transmitter catches and carries sounds only when in use, but one of our cautious citizens, being so amazed at its workings, refused to have one attached to the telephone in his office because it worked too well, he thought it wouldn't do. Sometimes there was talk there he didn't care to have made public. Sometimes a customer would tell a story or use a cuss-word, and he was afraid that some one might put their ear to the wire and catch the whole of it. No, no, he wouldn't have one in for a fortune. It was too much like the whispering gallery of St. Peter's. After much persuasion he became convinced that the transmitter was no busy-body or tell-tale, and no one could hear except the wire was in connection and his own phone taken down from the hook, and he invested. He says no secrets have leaked out so far, and his faith begins to strengthen, but he don't care to have one put in his house yet, until he is more fully satisfied that his wife can't hear everything that goes on at the office.

Another like doubter, who had a transmitter in his office, used to hold his hat over it, when he was talking about private business, but he is now rapidly recovering. One of the patrons of the line, who is noted for his politeness, received a call over the wire from a lady, and at the first salutation, "Good morning," he tipped his hat gracefully in acknowledgement, without being aware that that the invisible speaker was almost two miles distant, and that the charming tip of the hat was wasted on the desert air.

Another one nearly ruptured his lungs trying to yell loud enough to make a fellow hear clear across the river. He forgot everything except distance, and was bound to cover that, just as though there wasn't any telephone. He got over it, though.
The worst grumbler about the failure of the telephone to carry sounds distinctly, discovered after a time that he had forgotten to take the cotton out of his ears—the relics of a former attack of ear-ache, but he likes it now.

One of the clerks who is in the habit of "chaffing" the central office over the wire, just for fun, answered a call the other day. He took it for granted it was that fellow in the central office, and as he was busy, he just told that fellow to chin somebody else, seek a warmer climate, go hire a hall. The next Sunday when he went out to spend the evening, he met with a chilly reception. It seems it was the young lady herself who wanted to send a message to him over the wires and had received such abuse in response. She didn't think he would use such naughty, nasty words to her. He won't again.

One of the customers, who has a transmitter, is so used to holding the phone to his ear, and keeping right up the conversation, that he fell into a self-laid trap the other day. He stepped into a friend's office where there was only a telephone, and commenced talking over the wire. Without thinking he kept the phone to his ear, and answered a question all right, but of course the fellow at the other end couldn't catch it, as he didn't speak in the phone. He asked it again. It was answered more loudly. Again it was asked, and again answered still more loudly and distinctly. Again—well he commenced swearing, but his friend in the office called attention to the absence of any transmitter, and suggested that he use the phone for speaking as well as hearing, and the stream of angry profanity ceased.
